Know Your Parental Rights!

KNOW your RIGHTS!

As parents, you are the primary educators and religious instructors of your children and have the right to direct the religious and educational upbringing of your children. While your specific rights may vary from state to state, it is universal that you have the right to:

1. Question and address your child's school officials and school board members at publicly designated meetings with proper notice of the meeting provided.
2. Question, inspect, and review the curriculum taught in your child's school and/or classroom.
3. Opt your child out of any survey gathering personal information about your family and child such as religious or political beliefs and associations.
4. Opt your child out of instruction related to sexuality, critical race theory, and other topics that are a violation of your religious beliefs.
5. File a public records request and gather information about your state and local board of education, district, school, and curriculum.
6. Run for your local school board.
7. Support other like-minded people running for your local school board.

For assistance and to learn more about your specific rights by state, please contact Families for Educational Freedom.
